REPORT NO.

1. Available information indicates that the Accion Chilena Anticomunista (ACHA) has ceased to be an effective or active organization. The ACHA, which at one time reportedly had several thousand members as well as organized armed groups ready for action against the Communists, has now almost completely disintegrated.
2. The rapid growth of ACHA proved to be one of the principal reasons for its rapid collapse. The members were united solely in their anti-Communist stand, with many of them violently opposed to the Gonzalez Videla government, and others as rabidly supporting it. The resulting disunity within ACHA became more pronounced after Octavio O'Kingston Gonzalez, one of its leaders, stole the greater part of the armament possessed by this organization and was subsequently indicted for conspiracy against the government.
3. The loss of the armament plus the marked political differences between the ACHA members, as well as effective Communist penetration of the organization, all contributed to the disintegration. Information now available indicates that Arturo Olivarría Bravo, the founder and president of ACHA, no longer takes an active interest in this organization. No ACHA meetings are known to have been held for the last two months.
